

WHY DISCRIMINATORY PRINCIPLES ARE HARDWIRED INTO THE CHRISTIAN FABRIC

If you are to love God most of all, it follows then that you are to hate sin for it is against him. If we are all sinners as Christianity says, then it follows that we are to love the sinner and hate the sin. If the person is not deliberately or knowingly doing evil, they are still doing evil and what they do must be hated as much as a sin is. If you love the person but hate the evil then you must have the right to discriminate against employing a person who is not living as your God requires. It is the evil you discriminate against and not them. This may be hypocrisy but it is Christian doctrine and so we point the finger and accuse that faith of being pro-discrimination. Christians who deny that it is pro-discrimination are simply ignorant. They are still supporting something bad.

The nonsensical morality of the Church is pro-discrimination. For example, a woman who refuses to save her dying son by donating a kidney is admired for making her own choice and if she has an abortion she is an evil godless monster. With a ludicrous morality like that, you will not be terribly convinced that discrimination is wrong. You will feel that it is wrong for anybody to discriminate against you for your faith but you will hold that it is not wrong for you to do likewise for your faith is right and theirs is wrong.

Religious people discriminate against holders of different religious beliefs as bizarre as their own. The Catholic believes the bread and wine of Mass are really the body and blood of Jesus. If you believed that the door knob was really your dead father you would be considered mad and possibly dangerous. Religion is intrinsically bigoted and in search of special social privileges.

From what has been said, it is clear that even religions which do not discriminate lead to it. They don't have to preach it when things will take their course in the way they want. Religion and suffering and bloodshed and division tend to go together.

Atheists have no fear of being friends with or marrying religionists for we have the knowledge of the truth.
