

Flags and Religion

New neutral flags need to be designed by countries that have flags that have religious connotations. For example, the tricolour in Ireland is green representing nationalist Catholics and Orange representing unionist Protestants. The white in between signifies peace between the two sides. This discriminates against those who do not consider themselves Protestants or Catholics. It discriminates against Catholics who are not nationalist and Protestants who are not unionist.